The Daily Quote

"Not long ago, Congressional Republicans said authoring and passing a budget were the basics of governing... But here we are, on April 13, with Republicans holding both chambers of Congress, and there isn't a budget in sight... In fact, they won't just miss the mid-April deadline by a day or two. There's a better-than-even chance that the House and Senate will never pass a budget together, and there's an even better chance that neither chamber will pass a budget before the election... Republicans have undermined one of their core arguments for governing."
